

Social Presencing Theater (SPT)

It is an emerging art form that explores the creative potential of Theory U and presencing. The word theater comes from the Greek thea, which means “the act of seeing.” The word, theater, can be defined as a “place of enactment of significant events or actions.” SPT emerges from the community to enable that community to collectively see itself and enact its emerging future.

How do we transform our social systems to generate wellbeing for all? Whether it is an organization, a community, a network, or a team, Social Presencing Theater (SPT) allows change-makers to gain actionable insights into their current situation, seeing potential opportunities for change and stepping into this potential collectively. When applied as a systems transformation process, SPT helps shift the collective awareness and mobilize key stakeholders towards a sustainable future.
